In a world where facts are often disputed and emotions run high, it has become more important than ever to think clearly and make sound arguments.

Arguments of Fact is a groundbreaking book that provides a much-needed guide to everyday thinking. Written by Mark Lilla, a distinguished professor of the humanities at Columbia University, Arguments of Fact offers a fresh perspective on rhetoric, logic, and persuasion.

Lilla argues that we need to move beyond the traditional dichotomy of "facts" and "values." In today's polarized society, it is no longer enough to simply state one's opinion and expect others to agree. We need to be able to back up our claims with evidence and reason. And we need to be able to engage in honest debate with those who disagree with us.

Arguments of Fact provides a practical framework for doing just that. Lilla offers clear and concise advice on how to:

- Identify the facts of a case
- Construct a sound argument
- Evaluate the arguments of others
- Engage in respectful debate

Arguments of Fact is essential reading for anyone who wants to think more clearly and make more informed decisions. It is a powerful tool that can help us navigate the complex and often confusing world of everyday discourse.
