The Cato Supreme Court Review is an annual publication that provides in-depth analysis of the most important Supreme Court decisions of the previous year. The 2001-2002 edition covers a wide range of cases, including decisions on campaign finance, affirmative action, and the death penalty.

The Cato Supreme Court Review is written by a team of leading legal scholars and experts. The authors provide a balanced and objective analysis of the Court's decisions, offering insights into the legal reasoning and implications of each case.

Landmark Cases

The 2001-2002 Supreme Court term was one of the most consequential in recent history. The Court decided several landmark cases that have had a major impact on American law and society.

One of the most significant cases of the term was Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission. In this case, the Court struck down a provision of the McCain-Feingold Act that prohibited corporations and unions from making independent expenditures on political campaigns. The Court's decision has been widely criticized by campaign finance reformers, who argue that it will lead to an increase in corporate influence in politics.

Another landmark case of the term was Grutter v. Bollinger. In this case, the Court upheld the University of Michigan's affirmative action program. The Court's decision was a major victory for affirmative action advocates, who argued that it is necessary to promote diversity in higher education.

The Court also decided several important cases on the death penalty. In Atkins v. Virginia, the Court ruled that it is unconstitutional to execute mentally retarded criminals. In Ring v. Arizona, the Court ruled that it is unconstitutional to execute juveniles who were under the age of 18 at the time of their crimes.
