Spring Hope

Country ravaged, rivers and mountains remain. City in chaos, grass and trees still flourish. As spring breeze blows, war horses whinny, Across the vast land, willows are green again.

I have witnessed thousands of miles of battlefields, Still I believe the nation will revive one day. The king's court may be far from my sight, But my loyalty to my country will never fade.

Remembering My Brothers on a Cold Night

My brothers in distant lands, are you well? On this cold night, I gaze up at the moon and think of you. Such bleak winds, such bitter frost, can you endure it all? I recall the nights of our youth, warm and carefree.

In this moment of solitude, my heart aches with longing. I wonder if you remember our hometown and our family. Our dreams of the future, shared so many times, Now scattered like autumn leaves by life's cruel winds.

The Thatched Hut

My thatched hut by the river, a humble abode, Where I seek refuge from the world's tumultuous ways. Chrysanthemums bloom by the eaves, their fragrance fills the air, And morning glories climb the walls, their petals unfurling in the sun.

I have no riches or luxuries, but I have contentment, And in the simplicity of nature, I find tranquility. The birds sing their songs, the fish leap in the stream, And the wind whispers secrets in the rustling leaves.
