

How the New America Is Dooming the Republicans

The Republican Party is facing an existential crisis. As the country becomes more diverse and urban, the GOP is increasingly out of step with the values and priorities of the American people. This is why the latest book by Ruy Teixeira and John B. Judis, 'How the New America Is Dooming the Republicans,' is so important.

Teixeira and Judis argue that the Republican Party is on the wrong side of history. The country is becoming more diverse and urban, and the GOP is increasingly out of touch with the values and priorities of these new Americans. The party's focus on white identity politics and rural voters is alienating a growing majority of the electorate.

The authors provide a wealth of data to support their argument. They show that the Republican Party has become increasingly dependent on white voters, who are now a shrinking share of the electorate. In 2016, Trump won only 27% of the Hispanic vote and 8% of the black vote. This is a far cry from the 44% of the Hispanic vote and 13% of the black vote that George W. Bush won in 2004.

The Republican Party is also losing ground in urban areas. In 2016, Trump won only 33% of the vote in urban counties, compared to 44% for Hillary Clinton. This is a continuation of a long-term trend: the GOP has been losing ground in urban areas for decades.

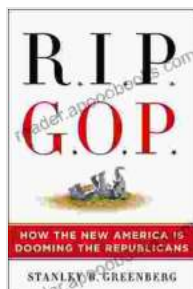

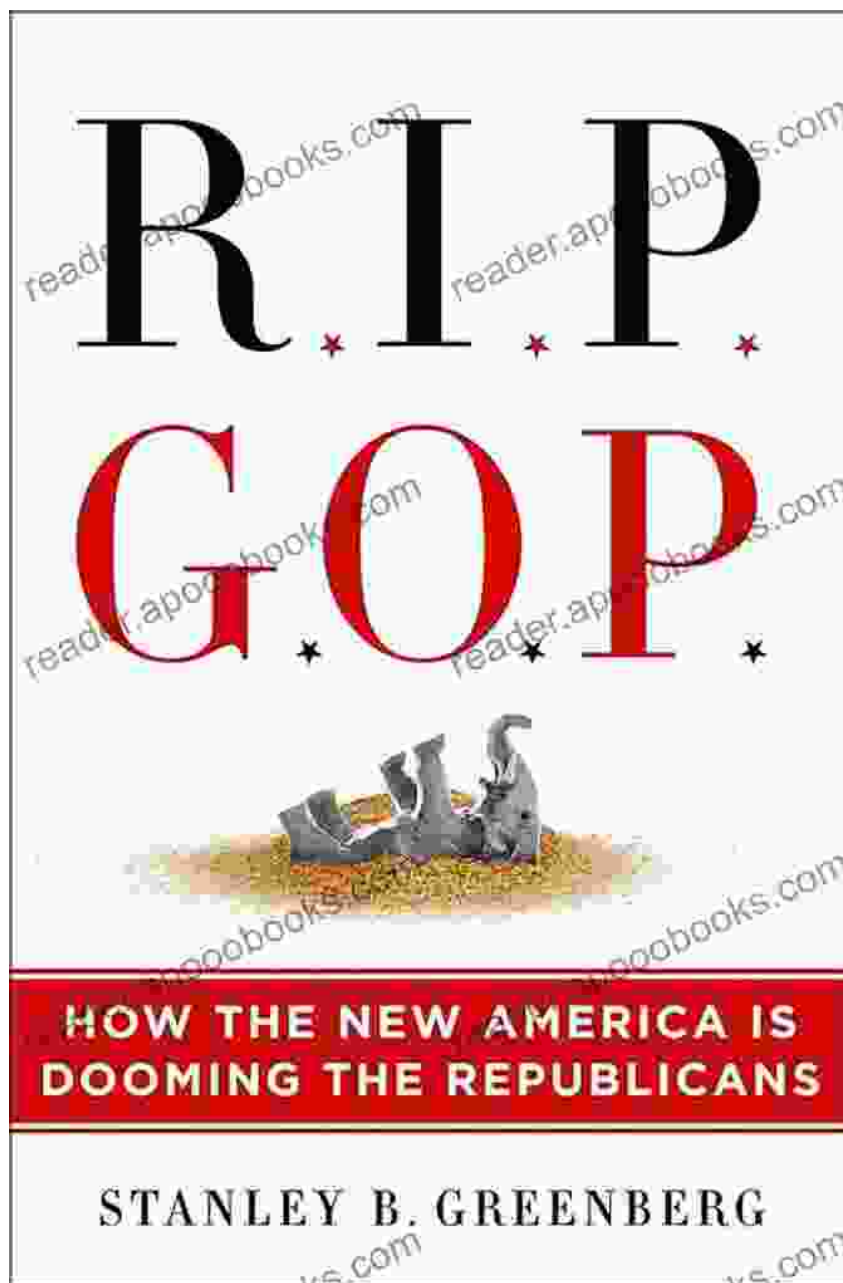

Teixeira and Judis argue that the Republican Party's decline is not inevitable. The party can change its course and adapt to the new America. But to do so, it will need to abandon its focus on white identity politics and rural voters and embrace a more inclusive and forward-looking agenda.

'How the New America Is Dooming the Republicans' is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the future of American politics. Teixeira and Judis provide a clear and concise analysis of the challenges facing the Republican Party and offer a roadmap for the party's future.
