The Civil War Siege of Jackson, Mississippi was a pivotal battle in the American Civil War. The Union Army, led by General Ulysses S. Grant, besieged the Confederate-held city of Jackson, Mississippi, for over two months. The siege ended with the surrender of the Confederate garrison, and the Union victory gave Grant control of the Mississippi River and opened the way for his march to the sea.

The siege of Jackson began on May 14, 1863, when Grant's army crossed the Pearl River and began to invest the city. Grant's forces outnumbered the Confederate garrison by more than two to one, but the Confederates were well-entrenched and had a strong defensive position. The siege lasted for over two months, and during that time, there were several bloody battles and skirmishes.

On July 4, 1863, Grant launched a major assault on the Confederate defenses. The assault was repulsed with heavy losses, and Grant was forced to withdraw. However, the Union forces continued to bombard the city, and on July 9, 1863, the Confederate garrison surrendered.
