Set against the backdrop of some of the most tumultuous events in American history, the novel explores themes of love, loss, and redemption.

The novel's protagonist, William "Hawk" Armstrong, is a young Confederate soldier from a wealthy plantation family. He is a skilled swordsman and a natural leader, but he is also haunted by the memories of his father's death in battle. When he meets Sarah "Dove" Jenkins, a young Quaker woman from the North, he is immediately drawn to her kindness and compassion. However, their love is put to the test by the war. Hawk is forced to fight against Dove's family and friends, and Dove is torn between her love for Hawk and her pacifist beliefs. As the war rages on, Hawk and Dove must find a way to reconcile their differences and find a way to be together.
